INTRODUCTION TO FROM THE RIGHT

Receptive Cognition

This was both a course and a clinic investigating Right Receptive Cognition. The live 5-week course was open only to those with Personality Sun/Earth Right orientation. The perspective Ra gives the Right is their approach to what it means to have a receptive Personality as a learning process.

This course was originally taught in the Spring of 2009. All original illustrations are in the Illustration Library.

Note: To avoid confusion, the words Left and Right are capitalized only when referring to Tone, but not capitalized when referring to things such as correctness.

Lesson One

The Receptive Mind

Hello, and welcome to all of you. I've actually been looking forward to this. It was interesting for me. It wasn't until the Ibiza Event two years—I did a thing where I separated Left and Right. I had one day where my lecture was only filled with those who were on the Left, and the next day it was oriented to the Right. It was a remarkable experience. It was the first time I could really feel something that I had seen and that I had known for a long time.

I'm three parts Left; I'm one part Right. The part of me that's Right is my Personality Nodes. That is the way I look at the world, the way I see things. I've been teaching a long time. I've taught just about every level of school that exists from public school all the way up to University.

One of the things I always noticed in my connection to children—and I've always loved teaching children—was that there were those children who would show you moments of real attention and then would drift off. And then there would be these other children who just sort of floated. They seemed to float. They seemed to be very different. It didn't look like they were particularly engaged. And yet, I would always discover that these children who didn't seem to be so engaged were ones who carried a great deal of depth in them. And a depth that was quite obvious when it came to responding to questions or those kinds of things.

I was seeing the Right. And I was seeing the Right before I truly understood, or could understand what that was all about. I didn't do a very good job. That is, given where I was in my own process and given that I was not-self and deeply strategic, I was following the basic regimen that most teachers follow in the way they educate children. And of course, all of that is rooted in being deeply strategic and placing a great deal of pressure on children to fulfill the strategic requirements in order for them to be able to succeed, and to be able to succeed on the mental plane according to the way in which a strategic being is intended to be.

So, it is been a long journey for me to come from that very, very early insight, very early taste of the Right to get to this place after all of these years to have the knowledge and to understand the mechanics. And ultimately to be able to lay a foundation, not simply for those of you who are Right, because those of you who are here, you're involved in Human Design. There's a great deal about this that you already know and by just operating out of your Strategy and Authority you're already aligning yourself to what is your nature.

It's more about what I can share with you and what I can show you that you can take in in your receptivity. And that, ultimately, in being able to recognize that, in being able to resonate to the essence of what it is to be a receptive mind, that in turn, the potential that is there in each and every one of you to provide a way, a way for those who are on your fractal, a way for those children who are Right-minded, to be able to operate successfully on this plane and not be handicapped.

Nobody Suffers More than the Right-Minded in a Strategic World

It's interesting. I have a Facebook page and I made a comment this morning about looking forward to teaching this class or beginning this course today. I made the comment that nobody suffers more than the Right-minded in a strategic world. And it was interesting to see resistance from those who are Left. It was actually quite amusing, in a way.

I don't think the Right-mind, the receptive mind, is in any way even understood from the most primitive level by those who are Left, because the Left-minded is so deeply, deeply strategic. And in their strategic, they only have their focus. And in only having that focus, there is no way they can grasp, even for a moment, what it really means to be Right-minded. To be Right-minded is something that is extraordinary.

As I said, because of the Right-ness I have in being able to look, being able to see the Right-ness in others, it has allowed me to find a way to be able not just simply measure it, but to grasp it, not just within the context of the mechanics, but to find a way to bring it into the life and allow it to flourish in the life.

Like so many things in my work, it began with my own family. My eldest son is Right-minded and I did not want him to suffer and be disadvantaged. He had to go into all of these traditional and standard schools where everything was done strategically, where the pressure was to develop strategic skills. The only way I could protect him was to create a kind of advantage for him in seeing his own mental process. That is, to be able to relax into what it is to be Right-minded.

Don't Study, Just Receive

My thing with him has always been the same, and it has been my basic advice that I've always given those who are Right-minded: Don't study. Don't be concerned about what it is that you know or understand or can make sense of. Don't look for it. Don't try to verify for yourself what is there. Do not put pressure on yourself to assess where you are at. Just simply recognize one thing and one thing only. Eve-
